

Charting the Path to College Transfer: The Role of CBOs | Apply Now!

The Partnership for After School Education (PASE) is now accepting applications for our learning community, Charting the Path to College Transfer: The Role of CBOs. Community-based organizations (CBO) are an underutilized resource that, if activated and invested in, have the potential to substantially increase the success of first-generation, low-income students to transfer successfully and attain their baccalaureate.

Through this program, a cohort of up to 15 New York City CBOs will participate in peer learning sessions and workshops designed to increase the knowledge and expertise within the afterschool community to better support students seeking college transfer. Members of the learning community will work collaboratively to set discussion session topics, share expertise, share ideas to enhance their practice, and identify areas of need for the field related to advisement and support of students seeking college transfer. Each participating organization will receive a one-time $500 stipend. This program is made possible by generous support from the William R. Kenan, Jr. Charitable Trust.
